personally witnessed, another great shrine, on the pattern of the Great Shrine Śrirangam (near Trichinopoly on the Kāveri River), has grown at Brndāvāna, on the lines ordained in the Pāñcarātra or Bhāgavat-sāstra (vide my article on this theme in JRAS. October, 1911), to which Rāmānuja and his school belong.

6. Even before Rāmānuja, St. Parakāla (Kali Age) visited the shores of the Yamunā; next Yāmunācārya, the great Guru of Rāmānuja in the tenth century, obtained his name Yamuna by dwelling on the banks of the Yamunā.

7. All these events go to illustrate the anecdote so aptly unearthed by Dr. Grierson from Indian bhakti literature.

ANOTHER NOTE ON THE WORD BHAGAVAN

In JRAS. for 1911, p. 194, Dr. F. Otto Schrader advocates "Holy" for Bhagavān. But this word would only be equivalent to Śuddhah, Parīśuddhah, Pātah, Pāvanah, Pavitrah, used in Sanskrit as epithets of God, and would not express the totality of attributes involved in Bhagavān.

The term "Perfect" which I proposed along with other terms, such as "Glorious", "Blessed", etc., although it approaches the perfection of God in all auspicious attributes, would literally, though not connotatively, be an equivalent of the Sanskrit Pārnah, another epithet of the Deity.

Other epithets which imperfectly comprehend all that is intended by Bhagavān are Divine, Supreme, Exalted, and Blissful. The second and third of these are represented by the Sanskrit Parah, while Blissful has its counterpart in Ānandah. Divine is simply that which pertains to Deva (Divya).

The infinitude of the auspicious attributes of God, and the entire absence of inauspicious attributes, are implied by the word Bhagavān, as explained in the verse from the Viṣṇu-Purāṇa (VI. v. 79) quoted several times in the course of this correspondence. On p. 7 of my English translation of the Bhagavad-Gītā with Rāmānuja’s Commentary, I rendered the six types of attributes therein enumerated as follows: (1) jñāna, omniscience; (2) śakti, omnipotence or power; (3) bala, strength; (4) aīśvarya, sovereignty; (5) vīrya, constancy or endurance; (6) tējas, glory.1 The question is therefore what single term could be chosen to completely express omniscience + omnipotence + strength + sovereignty + endurance + glory? There are three from which to choose—Perfect, Divine, Blessed. Inasmuch as, not only in idiom and sentiment but also in usage, in both English and Sanskrit, the word “Blessed” most nearly approaches Bhagavān, I resign in its favour terms “Perfect” and “Divine”, and join Professor Hopkins, who supports this rendering in his article on “The Epic use of Bhagavat” on pp. 727 ff. of JRAS. for 1911. But I should nevertheless prefer the adoption of the word “Bhagavat” itself, without translation, just as “avatāra”, “karma”, and “paṇḍit” have been admitted citizenship in the vocabulary of the English language.

I am unable to accept Mr. V. V. Sovani’s statement that the term Bhagavān was first used of great spiritual teachers and inquirers, and that next it came to be used as an epithet of those persons who had acquired spiritual powers, and that then it came to be used of emancipated souls, and, finally, of God. On the contrary, I agree with Professor Hopkins when he says: “It does not seem to me that the advance in application indicated by teacher, spiritually gifted persons, emancipated souls, God, can be maintained as a strictly historical fact.” As for me, Parāśara settles the question in a reverse order—

1 Even these renderings are tentative, but for our present purpose they may be accepted.

\text{Asabda-gócarasyā 'pi} \quad \text{tasya vai Brahmaṇo, dvija} \\
\text{pūjāyam BHAGAVAT-śabdah} \quad \text{kriyate hy upacāratah} ||

(Viṣṇu-Purāṇa, VI. v. 71.)

The purport of this verse is that God is ineffable—no word can express Him, but, as in His personal character he possesses “perfections” or “auspicious attributes”, even the word “Bhagavān” is a conditional or reverential appellative—a word chosen for the sake of reverence to designate Him.

tatra pūjya-padárthō 'kti \quad \text{paribhāṣā-samanvitak} \\
\text{śabdō 'yām nō 'pacārena tv anyatra hy upacāratah} ||

(ib. 77.)

But even this term Bhagavān, as a conditional epithet for God, is a sign or mark most aptly expressive of Him. Primarily it expresses “God”, and it is only secondarily transferred or applied to others (teachers, etc., of Mr. Sovani) as an honorific or courtesy title. Parāśara himself explains how the term most fully expresses the idea of God in Viṣṇu-Purāṇa: VI. v. 72–6. It is unnecessary to quote the text, which is easily accessible.

“O Maitreya, the word Bhagavat is expressive of Para-Brahman, the holy, the ineffably glorious, the cause of all causes. (72.)

“The syllable bha has two senses—Prop and Protector; and the syllable ga, O sage, means ‘Leader’, ‘Director’, ‘Creator’. (73.)

“The dissyllable bhaga is the sign expressive of the sextuple totality of sovereignty, energy, glory, wealth, wisdom, and freedom. (74.)

“The syllable va (= vān) is for Him who, by virtue of all objects (beings) abiding in Him, is the Inexhaustible, the Spirit of beings, the All-Spirit—He abiding in all things without exception. (75.)

"Thus, Maitreyya, this great word Bhagavān is the epithet solely of Vasudeva, who is Para-Brahman; and is not otherwise applicable." (76.)

Then follows verse 77 already quoted, and the whole is summed up in the oft-quoted 79th verse referred to above, which it is needless to repeat.

The Naighaṇṭukas have ruled “Tatra-bhavān BHAGA-VĀN iti śabdo vrddhaiḥ prayujyate pūjye”; the terms Tatra-bhavān and Bhagavān are used by great men for adorable objects.

Dr. G. A. Grierson’s choice “Adorable” is but the equivalent of Dhyeyah, or Upāsyah, or Arcyah.

Until, therefore, further perfection is attained, I would adhere to “Blessed” as the best translation of Bhagavān, which has a predicative value, of which even the Latin Optimus Maximus falls very much short.

Two Corrected Readings in the Myazedi (Talaing) Inscription

The words which I read as dījhām and ijjīm in my transliterations of the above-named inscription published in this Journal should be written diīcām and iīcim respectively. I make this alteration both on palæographical and on linguistic grounds. The symbol which I had conjecturally rendered jh is plainly, as I now see, ūc, a composite of ū and c (the Pāli version, I am informed by Mr. Taw Sein Ko, confirms this); and the amended readings give forms which from the point of view of comparative phonetics are more acceptable than my first readings, because more consistent with the phonetic system of
